The object of this paper seems to be to examine the Hindu conception of God, His attributes, and His relation to the human soul and the visible world, and to judge the nature of that conception in the light of the corresponding Christian conception. The Upanishads, Darsanas, Puranas, and Baisnab authorities are successively cited to shew that strict theism is not to be met with in any system of Hindu religious thought. The essay will be continued.	243
